Dear Sir,

From the catalogue of the University I see that a graduate of the State University, at the expiration of three years from the date of his graduation, may have the Master's degree corresponding to his Bachelor's degree, "provided he gives evidence of good character and completes a course of study fairly equivalent to any of the professional courses above named (a two year's course in any reputable professional school of Theology, law etc) under the direction of the faculty of this University either in residence at the university or in private" and presents a Thesis upon some theme required by the faculty. Now it has been five years since I graduated. I have been engage in reading a full and thorough course of law, not however under the direction of the Faculty of the State University, have during the same time been for three years a superintendent of schools, and can present evidence of good character. I desire to know if the fact that my course of study has not been under the direction of the Faculty will prevent me from receiving the master's degree, provided I can otherwise show myself entitled to it.

Respectfully
