Dear Sir:

I wrote to you last winter about lecturing for a literary society connected with our High School, but it did not suit you to come at a time when we could have secured you a good audience. I think you can do good for the University by lecturing at this place. I sent you two of our graduates this year and I hope to do better in the future. Will it be convenient for you to lecture for us this fall or winter? I suggest as Friday night about the middle of Dec. if you can come, and some other time would suit you better, please let me know.

Yours truly,
J. R. Starkey.
