

No. 1.

Law School.

The Indiana University Law School, at Bloomington, opens Sept. 17th. The course covers two years and leads to the degree of bachelor of laws. The pleading and practice taught has particular reference to the practice in Indiana and all other code States.

Write to Dr. John M. Coulter, President of the Indiana University at Bloomington, or to D. D. Banta, Dean of Law School, at Franklin, for catalogues and circulars.

No. 2.

Go to Your Own Law School

at Bloomington Indiana, where there is a full corps of law professors, a two years course, and the fees and cost of living are as low as at any other college town in the country. Opens Sept. 17.

Write to Dr. John M. Coulter, President of the Indiana University at Bloomington, or to D. D. Banta, Dean of Law School, at Franklin, for catalogues and circulars.

No. 1.

Law School

The Law School connected with the State University, at Bloomington, Ind., opens Sept. 17. The student in the collegiate department may take the Junior course in law as an elective study. Fees low and living cheap.

Apply for catalogues, circulars, etc., to President John M. Coulter, at Bloomington, or to D. D. Banta, Dean of Law School, at Franklin.

No. 2.

Law School.

The Indiana University Law School, at Bloomington, is a thoroughly equipped school. A two years course entitling to a degree; first class library, full corps of professors, and special effort made to fit students for practice in the State courts. Opens Sept. 17.

Write to President J. M. Coulter, at Bloomington, or to D. D. Banta, Dean of Law School, at Franklin, for catalogues, circulars, etc.