Report of the Department of Rhetoric and Oratory to the President of the Indiana University.
Mr. President:—

There is very little that needs to be said of this department at this time. Both branches of work in this department partake very largely of the nature of artwork, and depend much upon practice. As a consequence, the immediate results are often very ~~meagre~~ compared with those that are more remote. Yet the work of the thirty-three students studying in this department this term has shown, as a whole, excellent immediate results, surpassing in many instances my highest expectations; while the evident increase of the interest of the students in the work during the year, promises well for the future.
