Synopsis

The entire opera takes place over a 24-hour period in Naples, Italy.

Offended by the misogynistic remarks of their philosophical friend Don Alfonso, Ferrando and Guglielmo lay bets on the outcome of a game designed to test the fidelity of their respective sweethearts, Dorabella and Fiordiligi, who are on holiday in Naples with their maid, Despina.

The two young men agree to obey the instructions of Don Alfonso; they feign a heartbroken departure to the front, only to return a few hours later disguised as a couple of dashing young Albanians, eager to win the favors of the bereaved sisters. The young ladies put up an outraged defense of their virtue, but before long they are yielding to the exotic advances of the Balkan strangers.

As the action proceeds, the young conspirators become enmeshed by their own plot and are dismayed to find that they are just as confused about their feelings of fidelity as their young fiancées are. As the plot unravels, culminating in an ironic double wedding, the quartet of lovers discovers that no one is exempt from the secret inconsistencies of love and that they are not the people they thought they were just 24 hours ago.

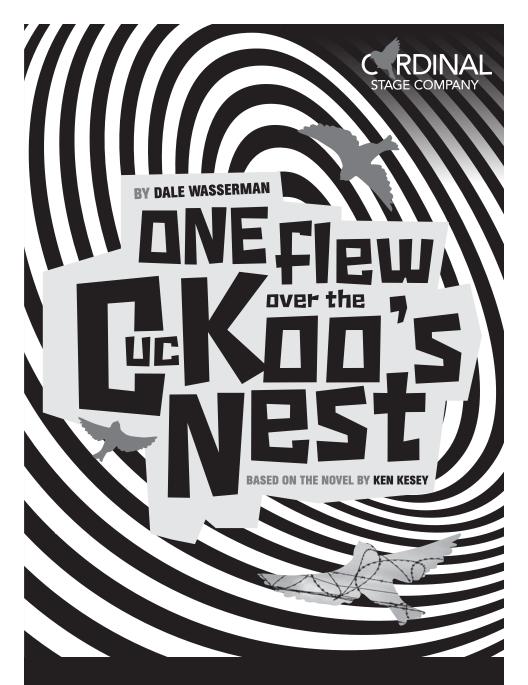

Program Notes

"Musical Truths and Illusions in Così fan tutte"

by Christopher Burrus (Musicology M.A. student)

While Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart and Lorenzo Da Ponte's Le Nozze di Figaro and Don Giovanni are widely regarded as monuments of the operatic repertoire, the reputation of Così fan tutte is more complicated. The opera was well received in Vienna, despite an unexpected cut to the first run of performances due to the death of Joseph II. At its premiere, the opera was heralded as a success, though things changed in later performances. In Germany and France, critical reception of Così was mixed. As the opera gained popularity, a general ambivalence towards the work set in, and this would follow the opera well into the nineteenth century. Beethoven and Wagner both found the opera peculiar, united in the opinion that Mozart's music, deeply passionate and with moments of genuine emotion, was tarnished by the trivial comedy of Da Ponte's libretto. Alternately, critics argued that the comedy and farcical hijinx of the libretto were spoiled by the sincerity of the music.

Convinced that Da Ponte expected Mozart to compose music to match the comedic tone of his libretto, several productions in the nineteenth century tried to pair the score with a story that reflected the gravitas of Mozart's music. Among these were a French attempt that paired the music of Così with Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost, as well as an English production that modified the original plot so that Fiordiligi and Dorabella were aware of the trick played against them by their lovers and prepared to seek revenge.

cardinalstage.org (812) 336-9300 Not until recently have productions of Così fan tutte in its original form become commonplace. The perceived distance between the music and the libretto that nineteenth century audiences found off-putting is now a curious attraction for the modern audience. Current productions have embraced the likelihood that Mozart fully intended for his music to warp the humor of Da Ponte's libretto into something slightly unsettling. In this way, Così is unique among the Mozart/Da Ponte operas. While Mozart often mixed features of opera seria and buffa in his music to add psychological depth to his characters, in this composition the music at times works directly against the characters.

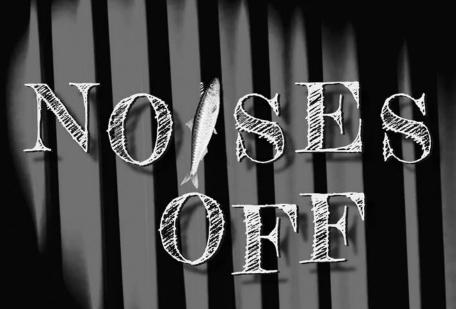

The conflicting relationship between music and stage action is particularly noticeable in the crafty philosopher Don Alfonso, whose ideological persona in the opera evokes the Enlightenment philosopher Rousseau. Don Alfonso believes that all truths are proven only by experience. Thus the four lovers in the opera have no choice but to endure a traumatic test of devotion if they are to learn anything about love. Don Alfonso's deep cynicism towards love is at the core of the libretto, manifesting itself both in the ironic comedy produced by his wager with Guglielmo and Ferrando and in the ambiguity of the opera's finale. While Don Alfonso explains that certain truths have been revealed as the four lovers reunite, it is not clear that their love has been strengthened nor that the original couples are still suited to each other. Rather, they proclaim as a group that it is best to approach life through reason and to look on the bright side of all things.

Da Ponte fashions Don Alfonso as the steadfast cynic of the opera, but Mozart subverts this cynicism. In the farewell scene in which Dorabella and Fiordiligi see their disguised lovers off to war, Don Alfonso's plotting is interrupted by a musical moment of pure and genuine emotion. The music of this scene starts as expected: Don Alfonso leads the trio "Soave sia il vento" with a rolling bass line, pushing the music forward and not allowing the women to dwell long on their misery. In the second farewell quintet, "Di scrivermi," the women break away from Don Alfonso's lead, singing lines of expressive lyricism while Don Alfonso interjects with mocking commentary, sustaining a humorous tone over the sadness that has crept into the ensemble.

In the last moments of the scene, a final trio is performed by the women and Don Alfonso as the soldiers depart. The music suggests nothing less than an honest, emotional moment from all gathered on stage. The sotto voce quality of the voices recalls a technique used in opera seria for moments of intense sensitivity. Mozart also employs muted violins that give the trio a subtle and tender quality. This cannot be mistaken for comedy. Rather, the music expresses vulnerability and heartbreak, the genuine emotions that one would feel if a lover had left with no certainty of return. More importantly, Don Alfonso is a willing participant in this final farewell trio. This is in stark contrast to his earlier involvement in the scene, in which he managed to null the women's emotional outpourings with sardonic asides. Mozart was thus able to undermine the cynicism of the libretto and complicate the character of Don Alfonso, perhaps as an artistic choice to question the true nature of love, reason, and human emotion.

"...a heady, headlong and altogether hilarious farce..."

- The New York Times

By Michael Frayn Directed by Murray McGibbon

FEB 26 - MAR 5

The farewell trio at the end of Scene 1 is one of several moments in the opera in which Mozart's music blurred the boundary between truth and illusion. He created a comedic opera in which the audience is not always sure when they should be laughing. This sets Così fan tutte apart from Figaro, Don Giovanni, and many other operas. It is a masterpiece that has been simultaneously described as Mozart's most beautiful, enigmatic, disturbing, and expressive opera.

Director's Notes

by Michael Shell

In 2011, I attended a performance of Sleep No More, an immersive theater installation in which while following various characters through a silent, movement-based presentation, the audience was required to wear Carnival-style masks. Concealed behind the mask, I began to perceive subtle changes in my state of being: I fluctuated from mere observer of horrifying events to part action-hero, chasing after characters as they ascended up flights of stairs to their next destination. A few days later, while thinking about Così fan tutte, I remembered my time behind the mask. I realized that by wearing the mask, unknown facets of my personality were revealed and, in subtle ways, changed my identity. It was then that the connection to Così became apparent.

Most people believe that Così is solely about fidelity. While a test of fidelity is implicit in the text and setup of the opera, I believe there is something far more personal and dangerous going on. Così is about identity. It is about the risks of deciding to pretend to be someone else and discovering that you are someone else. The disguise and concealment that occurs in the story actually reveals unsuspected aspects of each of the characters' identities.

As in The Marriage of Figaro and Don Giovanni, this Mozart and Da Ponte collaboration fluctuates between comedy and tragedy, with a crisis of identity at its core. The genius of Cosi's humor lies in the outrageousness of the disguises and the way they initially inform behavior and fuel the fight between the characters. But as the piece goes on, the battle goes inward and becomes a struggle between reason and emotion. Reason, synonymous with structure and rules of propriety, is tossed aside as emotion and nature begin to take control. So when the disguises are removed, and the truth is revealed, reason is invoked as a way to cover the bruise:

"Blessed is the man who lives his life with reason and good humor. For in trial and tribulation common sense shows us the way. Let the world be drowned in misery, all our troubles will turn to laughter. If we smile at life's adversity, peace and love will win the day."

But is reason just the final disguise? Can these lovers reunite and return to who they think they are, or have they discovered that they are someone else entirely?

Siena went on to teach in a number of operatic settings (among them, the Curtis Institute of Music, Metropolitan Opera, New York City Opera, and Seattle Opera). Over the years, she worked with a number of well-known singers, including Samuel Ramey, Justino Díaz, Carol Vaness, Wolfgang Brendel, June Anderson, Gianna Rolandi, and Jerry Hadley. The conductors, coaches, and stage directors with whom she has worked include Otto Guth, Max Rudolf, Edoardo Müller, David Effron, Arthur Fagen, Anthony Pappano, Anthony Manoli, Terry Lusk, Dino Yannopoulos, Tito Capobianco, Andrei Şerban, John Cox, and John Copley. At New York City Opera, Siena worked closely with Beverly Sills—as her executive assistant, as a diction coach, and as the creator of English supertitles for a dozen operas. More recently, she worked for two years as a coach for the Young Artists Program of the Los Angeles Opera and, for the past six years, she has taught in Dolora Zajick's summer Institute for Young Dramatic Voices. Born in Florence, Italy, to an Italian mother and a Russian émigré father, Siena arrived in the United States at age seven. She received a B.A. from Sarah Lawrence College and, in her twenties, worked for two years in Italy as secretary to the president of the Olivetti Company. Many years later, she continued her education, earned a master's degree, and became licensed as a psychotherapist by the state of California, where she practiced for 15 years. The mother of two grown children, she moved to Bloomington to be near her son, who lives here with his wife and two young daughters.
