THE STORY OF A SONG

THE STORY OF A SONG.

THE romance of youth, the fidelity of true love and the tragedy of a broken heart formed the sentiment of "Where the Silv'ry Colorado Wends Its Way." Thirty years ago the brawny arm of a stalwart young German wielded the ax to build a little cabin up in the heart of the Rockies. Around the modest little home was the beauty spot of the world, and in the valley below the silvery Colorado River wended its way to the desert beyond. All nature seemed to combine to make the mountain cabin the ideal of all that was fair.

It was here that he brought his beautiful and devoted bride. The color came into the pale cheeks and the thin hands gathered new strength as the winter passed and the summer came. It was then that happiness seemed complete, and as they sat in the twilight shadows and listened to the songs of nature, they felt sweetly blessed in the many years of happiness that passed.

At last one year, with the changing of the winter's snows, the scene changed. The cheeks lost their color and the eyes their lustre. No more did the sunsets seem so fair or the songs of the birds so sweet. What would life be without her whom he loved best?

It was just before Christmas that their eyes met for the last time in life. She placed her hand in his, a faint smile gathered around her lips, and she quietly passed into the great beyond.

The young German's heart was broken and he never left the mountain home again. Last Spring a party of prospectors found the gray-haired old man dead in a corner of the old cabin. In his hand was a photograph of the young bride who was all to him. It seemed as though a smile had come over his face as he went to meet her in the great beyond where sorrow does not dwell. In the mountain home he had fought out the tragedy of life and gladly surrendered to death.

Two Denver letter carriers, Chas. Avril and C. H. Scoggins, caught the inspiration of the romance, and in the character of the old man in the lonesome mountain home they found the beautiful sentiment of "Where the Silv'ry Colorado Wends Its Way." Already the melody has found a welcome in the hearts of the people, and its pure sentiment will cause it to live for years.

The State Legislature of Colorado has considered seriously the adoption of "Silv'ry Colorado" as the official state song. A member of the senate hearing the song played by a band in the East, became so enthused over it that he came back and introduced a bill for the purpose. There were geographical objections. So it is now proposed to re-christen the majestic Grand River to meet the situation.
